The present project aim at expanding the successful MIT model to serve as a basis for a new model of mentors' training carried by the academia, in Israel. In the new model we will strengthen the MIT model to be a bachelor and MA accredited courses, where mentors, BT, pedagogical guides, accompanying teachers together with the school staff, will work together for maintaining mentors professional development. To reach our goals we will study new models that take place in EU HEIs' to enrich our model of implementation. for example we will use teachers' peer group mentoring (PGM) techniques (e.g Pennenan et. al 2018) which involves teachers sharing and reflecting on their experiences, discussing problems and challenges that they meet in their work, listening, encouraging one another, and, above all, learning together and from each other (Heikkinen et al., 2012). To conclude; the main goal of the project is to improve the quality of teacher training in Israel through an efficient and sustainable mentoring system based on best EU practices with their mentees. To achieve that the project will:

- 1) develop and refine via pilot implementation and evaluation an efficient and sustainable mentoring system in Israel and Implement it at least 18 MIT training courses in the Israeli HEIs.
- 2) train 360 mentors in the new MIT courses
- 3) to facilitate 3 international mobilities and train-the trainers scheme for implementation of mentoring system in Israel
- 4) provide a certification system for mentoring system in Israel as label of quality through PGM teachers' peer group mentoring
- 5) disseminate the learning process of MIT developed within PROMENTOR partner institutions to other Israeli HEIs
- 6) ensure traits of communication and sharing with the use of ICT.
